Displaying multiple levels of data visually has been proposed to address the challenge of limited screen space.

Although many previous empirical studies have addressed different aspects of this question, the

how, when, or even if displaying data at multiple levels is effective. To shed more topic, we conducted a systematic review of 22

extract high-level design guidelines. To facilitate discussion, we cast our analysis findings into a four-point decision tree:

- (1) When are multi-level displays useful?
- (2) What should the higher visual levels display?
- (3) Should the different visual levels be displayed simultaneously, or one at a time?
- (4) Should the visual levels be embedded in a single display, or separated into multiple displays? Our analysis resulted in three design guidelines: (1) the number of levels in display and data should match; (2) high visual levels should only display task-relevant information; (3) simultaneous display, rather than temporal
