Characteristics. Winnicott saw the true self as rooted from early infancy in the experience of being alive, including blood pumping and lungs breathing – what Winnicott called simply being. Out of this, the baby creates the experience of a sense of reality, a sense that life is worth living. The baby's spontaneous, nonverbal gestures derive from that instinctual sense, and if responded to by ...

Donald Winnicott (1896 – 1971) was a British psychoanalyst and paediatrician, best known for his theories of child development, and for his influence in the development of object relations theory.

Donald Winnicott • Counselling Tutor

Winnicott was a pediatrician who was concerned with the development of children. He took a softer approach than such as Freud and Lacan, perhaps moderated by his teacher, Melanie Klein. This included views about the role of parents. This helped popularize his teachings, especially after guilt engendered by more Freudian approaches.

The child for Winnicott is not a body that eats and sleeps, but a living and breathing human being with an unconscious and imaginative life equal to that of the adult. "An infant is there already, actually living a life, building up memories, forming a personal pattern of behaviour" (p. 105). A sense of awe and wonder pervades Winnicott's essays.

This is a psychology and a psychologist whose work is worth giving the closest attention. Adam Phillips does a fine job of interpretation. I have read Winnicott's papers before, but as with much original thought, it emerges out of other people's words and terminology i.e. Freud and M. Klein, and brings some ambiguity along in the process.

[Winnicott's] depiction of the beginning of human life is a kind of wry sublime. The infant's relation to his mother, he says, is one of utter ruthlessness. He uses her in an absolute way, as if this were her destiny. Gradually, by making herself less available to him, the mother 'disillusions' the infant.
